From the dark of your soul's night came the first rays of daylight in your moss-covered footsteps thoughts were hiding like secrets

Like a flower on an island grown of seeds from the mainland through the ages of mankind they will light up your own mind

Just close your eyes just take a ride through the veil to Shangri-La

In the silvery moonlight there's a shade of a strange kind like a sign on the wet sand written down by your own hand

From the age of the cavemen you've been wading through wastelands but you're into a new fate you're no longer a primate

You brought me here knowing and unknowing children in the wizards of ourselves wandering secret forests Knowing magic words from times when beasts and flowers, birds and rocks each spoke aloud an alphabet And held dialogues with earth who answered back with birth
